Purpose

The Anti-racist Wales Action Plan, first published June 2022 and refreshed in 2024, sets out the Welsh Government's commitment to make Wales an anti-racist nation by 2030. It centres the lived experiences of Black, Asian and Minority Ethnic people, names institutional and structural racism directly, and combines a rights-based approach with openness and transparency. Its core principle is co-production: the plan was developed with ethnic minority people, academics, trade unions and activists, on the premise that government cannot deliver change of this magnitude alone.

Context: the 2024 race riots (Co-Chairs' foreword)

The refreshed plan was written in the context of the major race riots across the UK in late July and early August 2024. The Co-Chairs of the External Accountability Group describe these as the first real external test of the plan. While Wales did not see the violent disorder experienced in England, people from ethnic minority groups across Wales reported incidents of racial hatred and threats that significantly impacted their everyday lives. Many reported feeling alone, and experiencing fear and trepidation in public spaces; many also reported that their own organisations and institutions failed to reach out to check on their wellbeing. The key lesson drawn is that society should not wait for racism to manifest on the streets before taking concerted action to address it. The refresh adds greater emphasis on intersectionality (including the specific concerns of Gypsy, Roma and Traveller communities), on data and impact measurement, and on the role of local government and regional representation.

Rights-based framework

The plan situates itself within a set of statutory and international commitments, including the Equality Act 2010, the Public Sector Equality Duty, the Well-being of Future Generations (Wales) Act 2015, the Human Rights Act 1998, the Welsh Language (Wales) Measure 2011 and the Cymraeg 2050 strategy, and the UN International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination (CERD). "An Anti-racist Wales is an Equal Wales for everyone."

How change is measured

The Race Disparity Evidence Unit (established January 2022) developed a logic model and impact-measurement framework distinguishing inputs, outputs, outcomes, and long-term impacts. Crucially, the framework pairs numeric indicators with lived experience as an impact measure, on the principle that indicators give valuable information but do not tell the whole story. A worked example used throughout is the expectation that the plan's actions lead to a reduction in incidences of bullying and harassment for ethnic minority people, and that ethnic minority people feel more confident to report such incidents — measured through both recorded-incident data and lived-experience evidence.

Governance

Delivery is overseen by an External Accountability Group (EAG) of experts and diversity representatives, an Internal Support and Challenge Group of Welsh Government policy leads, policy-specific subgroups, and engagement with ethnic minority people through four regional forums. An Implementation Team and the Race Disparity Evidence Unit provide coordination and evidence support.

Thematic chapters

The plan spans leadership; education and Welsh language; culture, heritage and sport; health; social care; homes and places; local government; employability and skills; nation of sanctuary; crime and justice, including hate crime; and childcare and play. The crime-and-justice chapter, and the plan's framing of hate crime and community safety, are the most directly relevant to AI-mediated moderation for minority ethnic communities.

How this anchors the LPA corpus

In the retrieval corpus, ArWAP grounds the Welsh policy and community-safety context that UK-wide legislation does not capture: the anti-racist standard against which content is judged, the centrality of lived experience and community confidence to report, and the documented reality (post-2024) that minority ethnic communities in Wales experience online and offline racial hostility while often being left unsupported by institutions. It is most salient for the race/ethnicity and national-origin typology indices and for the system's overall legitimacy framing, complementing the Equality Act (substantive discrimination concepts) and the Online Safety Act (platform duties).
